Portland Rose Festival - June 15-20, 1925

Portland, Oregon's, Annual Rose Festival has attracted world-wide attention and brought to the "City of Roses" a fame and distinction that is unique. In no other city in the world is it the custom of citizens for one whole week each year to put aside all thought of selfish commercialism and pay homage to the Rose, Symbol of Love and Happiness.

A week of festival during which veritable tons of roses are used to decorate tremendous floats, when every store and office building exhibits roses in great profusion, when public and private gardens, and two hundred miles of street parkings are proudly flaunting thousands of lovely specimens of the queen of flowers—such a week indeed seems calculated to make a lasting impression on the city's guests and to arrest the attention of a nation.

PRIMEVAL WOMAN AND THE DAWN OF LOVE

God's mercy, friends, unto you all—
 Thrice welcome to our carnival!
 We'll sing and dance for your delight
 And revelry shall reign tonight.
 Again we greet the circling year,
 The season of the rose is here;
 And while the queen of flowers holds sway
 Rosaria shall homage pay.
 From man's primeval wild abode
 Our masque shall trace in episode
 The rose's story—age to age,
 Upon our shifting Titan stage.
 Far back in that dim yesterday
 We'll watch the cave man at his play,
 The savage brute who lives, loves, kills

Among the Himalayan Hills.
 There where the mountain zephyr blows
 In wild profusion blooms the rose,
 The first wild rose, whose mute appeal
 Caused rough untutored man to feel;
 The first wild rose, whose sweetness blessed
 The struggling passion in his breast;
 The first wild rose mate gave to mate,
 To make love's word articulate.
 The curtain rises—look upon
 The children of creation's dawn!
 How long ago no mortal knows—
 The opening chapter of the rose.

EPISODE II.

THE ATTAR OF THE ROSE

To Himalayan Hills, farewell!
Another chapter I will tell,
The while I lead you by the hand
Down to that sunny Persian land,
Where painted birds forever sing
Amidst those gardens burgeoning
With roses, till the scented air
Breathes roses, roses everywhere;
Until the lives of men we see
Filled with ambrosial ecstasy.
Oh little wonder Persia's heart
Gave to the world that sweetest art
Of perfume, from the petals torn—
Whence Attar of the Rose is born.
Now youth and damsel revelling,
The blossoms of Damascus bring,
With baskets laded to the brim,
With rhythmic step and festal hymn,
While Allah from his skies doth bless

The jar of perfect loveliness;
The jar with myriad blossoms filled,
From which rare perfume is distilled.
But see—a youth from out the throng
Transfigured stands—he gazes long
And wistfully upon the vase,
A slave to that one perfect face,
Whose loveliness beyond compare
The youth beholds ensulptured there.
And now the strangest thing doth chance,
For so it tells—the old romance—
That by the Magic power of love
The sculptured stone was made to move,
And she who did the vase adorn
With flame of life was now reborn;
The rose of stone in that same hour
Through love became a living flower,
And lover claimed his love—so goes
The Persian Story of the Rose.

EPISODE III.

THE AGE OF MYTHS

As years went on a longing stole
Into man's newly wakened soul—
A great desire that he might be
The heir of immortality,
To go beyond the world's frontier;
So man evolved that mystic sphere,
Created Gods to be his kin—
The Age of Myths was ushered in.
So happened it that he became
Possessed of beauty's deathless flame;
The Gods that he himself had made
In sculptured marble were portrayed,
The deeds they did he caused to be
Immortalized in poetry.
Our pageantry with brave array
Will show these gods of yesterday,
With wreath and garland and festoon,
And all the road of triumph strewn
With roses—for the ancients chose
The glorious hundred-leafed rose

To symbolize art's golden age.
Here you will see upon our stage
A glen swept by the summer breeze
And radiant with white rose trees;
In this celestial paradise
Adonis, sorely wounded, lies.
Here Venus, with her train of white,
Beholds Adonis in his plight;
To succor him she hurries now,
And bending o'er his fevered brow,
With tears and God-like gentleness,
Restores him with a sweet caress.
But where she treads, her flesh is torn
Most cruelly by a vagrant thorn,
Her precious blood all crimson flows
And stains the whiteness of the rose.
So came the blood red rose to be
The treasure of posterity;
The red, red rose to symbolize
The beauty of love's sacrifice.

EPISODE IV.

THE ROSE OF SHARON

The days of man-made myths are gone.
 Now will you, marv'ling, look upon
 Another scene, and what befell
 A king of ancient Israel—
 Oh Solomon—magnificent
 And masterful, to whom is lent
 Great earthly wisdom. They shall bring
 In gorgeous pomp the Hebrew King.
 A thousand wives—his retinue,
 The monarch's path of triumph strew.
 In oriental splendor he
 Ascends the throne of majesty.
 But soft! Let cease the trumpet's flare,
 Let cymbals die upon the air,
 Hushed be the music at its height,
 For her—the lovely Shulamite.
 A worker in the fields was she,
 Whom Solomon one day did see
 And found her most exceeding fair,
 And straightway he gave order there
 That certain of his eunuchs bring
 Her to the harem of the king.

So comes the lovely Shulamite
 Her royal master to delight.
 A fair white lily is her face,
 Her dance betrays a natural grace,
 She has no courtly artifice
 And knows none but a lover's kiss—
 Her shepherd lover of the dell,
 Swift footed as a young gazelle,
 Who joins her now—a wild heart plea,
 Invoking kingly clemency.
 The Shulamite of old romance
 So wins the monarch with her dance,
 That he now bids the maid depart
 With him, the shepherd of her heart.
 This royal courtesy he shows
 With one immortal scarlet rose—
 The Rose of Sharon!—Such was she
 Who with her guileless witchery,
 Taught Solomon the wise, how great
 Could be the love of mate for mate,
 How it was of all loves the best,
 The only love—the holiest.

EPISODE V.

THE ROSE OF JERICHO

Long have we traveled on the way.
 Now comes the dawning of the day
 When that dear blood of Christ is spilled,
 And so is prophecy fulfilled,
 And man's immortal priceless soul
 Through Christ's great love shall be made whole.

The star of Bethlehem has led
 The wise men to the Christ-child's bed,
 And Herod, King, his vengeance vents
 By slaughtering the innocents,
 So that no earthly king shall be
 To question his supremacy.
 And here a legend doth record
 There came an angel from the Lord
 And told to Joseph secretly
 How they must take the Child and flee.
 With moving hordes the picture fills—
 The shepherds of Judea's hills,
 The tribesmen of Egyptian strain,
 Men of the mountain and the plain—
 Each serving humbly day and night
 The refugees upon their flight.
 Before the Holy Family go,
 In raiment like the drifting snow,

The Hosts of Innocents—whom he,
 The Herod, slew in jealousy.
 Their infant souls in white array
 Shall guard the Christ-Child on His way.
 Now Mary, from her travel weak
 And wearied sore, a rest doth seek,
 She lays the babe with tend'rest care
 Beneath a withered rose-tree there,
 When lo! A miracle! The tree
 Breaks into bloom effulgently—
 For each wee babe the sword hath slain
 There blooms a rose incarnadine,
 Which ever after man shall know—
 The blood-red Rose of Jericho.
 Oh Mary Mother—Blessed One,
 Rejoice at what the Lord hath done,
 To Him who hath made glad thy days,
 Oh Holy Mother, sing thy praise.
 Let angels from the realms above
 Tell out the paean of their love,
 While all the hosts of mortals sing
 Their hallelujahs to the King.

MUSIC

CHILDREN'S CHORUS "The Rose of Jericho"

We are the Hosts of Innocents, that clear
the way for Christ today,
Bloom out, Bloom out, sweet Rose of Jericho,
A sign for all the world to know.
We are the first born Herod slew,
Our lives we gave that He might live.
Oh purple Rose of Jericho, lift up your withered head so fair,
Beneath you rests God's only heir.

CHORUS OF THE HEAVENLY HOST "A Babe Is Here of Mary Born"

A babe is here of Mary born,
A King to be whom tyrants seek;
Within his Mother's arms forlorn,
He sleeps upon his baby cheek.

Oh, Holy Child, arise and go,
No human hand may quench Thy star;
The Love that led Thee from Thy home
Will bring Thee back from lands afar.

'Cross the miles of desert sand
You fare beneath an alien sky;
Behind you is the tyrant's hand
Around you is the jackal's cry.

Oh Holy Child, about Thy head,
Angelic choirs are singing sweet,
Angelic wings are hiding Thee,
The way is safe before Thy feet.

EPISODE VI.

THE WARS OF THE ROSES

Since you beheld our pageant last
 Full fourteen hundred years have passed.
 No more the patriarchs hold sway
 And Rome has fallen to decay;
 Crusaders sleep in rusted mail,
 They seek no more the Holy Grail;
 Yet are the nations vexéd sore,
 Yet is there war and rumored war,
 The noise and tumult yet unstilled,
 Man's dream of rest yet unfulfilled;
 Nor hope of universal peace
 Until the feudal system cease.
 But now a change has come—at length
 Man rises through his party strength;
 And England, long diseased in state,
 Writhes while her troubles culminate,
 Unconscious of that mighty thing
 The War of Roses is to bring.

Our curtain rises, looking down
 On Temple Garden, London Town.
 The story falls upon a time
 When Henry Sixth is in his prime;
 Two rose trees in the garden grow—

One red, one white, and down below,
 Around a table five men stand—
 The noblest blood in Britain's land.
 'Tis Vernon, Warwick, Somerset,
 And Suffolk and Plantaganet,
 And when their heated councils close
 Each noble plucks himself a rose—
 A red or white, to typify
 That side for which he'll bleed and die.

A thunder comes of war's alarms,
 Opposing armies, clash of arms—
 Oh bleeding valiant, those who were
 The House of York and Lancaster.
 But as the sunshine after rain,
 Upon the air, a joyous strain
 Of music comes—where combat fails,
 Love in his majesty prevails.
 Now shall we see that bloody hour
 Forgotten 'neath the bridal bower,
 And midst the rose's scented breath
 Will Henry wed Elizabeth,
 And England find those wars not vain
 That gave to her a People's reign.

DANCE OF THE PACIFIC WAVES

Upon the dark uncertain main
 The Puritans set sail, to gain
 A land that knows no monarch's throne—
 America, the great unknown.
 Portentous were the storms that bore
 The Mayflower to that rocky shore,
 Cold was the welcome that they found
 Upon Atlantic's hostile ground,
 And dearly did our fathers pay
 To worship God in their own way.
 And touching is the memory
 Of her beside the sounding sea,
 Rose Standish—beautiful and brave,
 The first to fill a pilgrim's grave.
 Thus sanctified, a rose did spring,
 Which we this day are honoring—
 A rose beside the lonely sea,
 The first rose of our liberty.
 A century and more have passed,
 The thirteen colonies have cast
 Their burd'ning yoke aside, and he
 Who shapes their solemn destiny,
 Is Liberty's immortal son,
 The young Virginian—Washington.
 He loved this storied flower—the rose,
 And in Mount Vernon's garden grows

The seed he planted, there to be
 An ever-blooming memory
 Of her, his mother; so the name—
 The Mary Washington, first came—
 That scarlet rose by which we know
 Those stately dames of long ago.
 And now a great urge fills man's breast,
 His restless spirit forges west.
 Beneath the brazen canopy,
 O'er deserts white with alkali,
 The live-long day from early dawn,
 His plodding caravans push on.
 The savage and the sun's hot breath
 Take out their toll—the toll of death.
 Across the widening vale of years,
 We greet you, hardy pioneers;
 Explorers, trappers, traders who
 First broke the northwest passage through
 Men of the plow whose horny hands
 Made way for grain and orchard lands;
 You circuit riders—you who trod
 The wilderness to serve your God;
 Across the widening vale of years,
 Once more we greet you, Pioneers,
 And with a reverential mood
 We greet the rose of solitude,

That blossomed by your cabin door,
 As emblem of the faith you bore.
 So has our story now progressed,
 Our curtain rises in the west—
 Out where the unabating blast
 Sweeps Neptune's Empire broad and vast;
 Our Masque—the thund'ring sea that laves—

The Dance of the Pacific Waves.
 Now are the waters vanished,
 With magic protean, you're led
 To where the solemn red-men live

Within the forest primitive.
 'Tis near the closing of our tale—
 The silence of the sunset-trail,
 The thin blue smoke, a smouldering fire—
 An ancient people's funeral pyre.
 A Chieftain there we now behold,
 Lit by the day's last ling'ring gold;
 And writ upon his bronzed face,
 The glory of a dying race.
 He lifts his mighty voice to sing
 To the Great Spirit, questioning.

"The Sunset Trail"

Dolph Thomas and P. M. Blenkinsop, on alternate nights.

Great Spirit, O Great Spirit,
Thy people take the Sunset Trail of destiny,
Who once possessed the fair rich valleys
of the Dawn.
Around the dying campfire,
Now they dream old dreams of glory gone.
Old visions fade, more faintly come
The echoes of their battle song;
But still unconquered, free,
Still unafraid, they face
Sunset and Destiny.
O Great Spirit,
Thou hast willed.

Great Spirit, O Great Spirit,
Thou alone dost know
How high our yearnings,
And how deep our woe.
Great Spirit, O Great Spirit,
Now sinks the Sun,
The sound of battle dies away,
The day is done.
O Great Spirit,
Thou hast willed.
Great Spirit, O Great Spirit,
We bow to Destiny.
Over the Sunset Trail we come,
To Thee, To Thee, To Thee.
Great Spirit, O Great Spirit,
Thou hast willed.

EPISODE IX.

ROSARIA

From age to age our pantomime,
With song and color, dance and rhyme,
Has told the rose's tale—how man
From caves and savagery began
His upward struggle toward the light,
By beauty led, and love and truth and right,
And how he always, ever chose
As symbol for these things, the rose.
And it is meet we hold each year
This festival of roses here—
Here where the humblest home makes room
To shield some lovely rose's bloom;
And where our hills are garlanded
With roses yellow, white and red;
And where each evening mountain shows
The gold-pink petal of the rose;
And where each coming, younger age
Shall fall heir to their heritage,
Till every state and nation knows

Our lovely city of the rose.
Oh you who've come to look upon
Our Portland, beautiful as dawn,
Her arms reach out to welcome you
With roses, roses ever new.
But look—the curtain! harken all!
Last chapter of our carnival!
All tenantless our throne has been,
Rosaria must have a queen.
Now crowds the mighty stage's span—
The coronation of Suzanne.
Not from a legend old came she,
For her we searched no history,
She is our own—rare, wise and good,
Fair flower of western womanhood,
To her let every nation bring
The rose of its own nurturing,
Let every epoch of our play
Bring roses of that yesterday,
And let our children, tripping light,
Be spend-thrifts of the rose tonight.

Peace Rests Upon the Hills of God,
The tyrant flag is furled;
The sword is sheathed, War's iron rod
No longer rules the world.

Brave martyrs have died for us,
For hero souls aspire
To kindle freedom's flaming torch
With man's immortal fire.

The harvest and the recompense
Shall be new heights to climb
And man shall live to know and claim
His heritage sublime.

Awake, all nations of the earth,
And know that war shall cease,
Arise, all people of the earth,
And hail the dawn of peace.
